1987 As the title

suggests these books are visual presentations of American magazine advertisements from the 1950's, a period when American advertising flourished as never before. Not surprisingly, this has been called the golden era of American advertising empire, a time when economic prosperity was such that advertising expenditures could soar to seventy percent and higher. With the current fondness for past decades the interest in "America of the fifties" has heightened enormously. Thus, from a myriad of possible vantages, the author of this series has chosen to limit the scope of this collection to magazine advertising. Enjoy.
